

THE LISTENING POST

Concert rolls without Mick

Mick Jagger is not performing on Cottesloe beach on April 7.

Organisers of the By the C concert have asked the council for permission to start the music at noon, instead of 1pm.

"I think it's to do with the extended line-up," deputy CEO Garry Bird told councillors on Tuesday night.

He said the headline act would be John Farnham along with The Black Sorrows, Ross Wilson (formerly of Mondo Rock), and Vanessa Amorosi.

Councillor Lorriane Young asked: "Mick Jagger?"

Alas, Mr Bird said no. Mr Farnham stops singing at 8.30pm and the event is scheduled to be over half-an-hour later.

Tickets start from $122.22, plus a $4.95 handling fee and maybe a delivery fee.

Well clothed

A North Cottesloe family was organised for their boy's return to school last month.

The Ozone Parade residents spent $222.23 on a grey jumper ($33); two pairs of shorts ($22); shirts ($85.28); a sports cap ($17.60); a back back ($53.35); and white sports socks ($11).

The tax invoice was found on the footpath outside the North Street Store on Tuesday morning.

Subi's 'hit from the hood'

Subiaco is the next suburb in line for a tongue-in-cheek adaptation of a popular song by Matt from a local FM radio station.

The breakfast show presenter focuses on different Perth suburbs and parodies the good and bad things about them in his own words, set to the tune of hit songs.

He announced last week "that little chestnut Subiaco" would be the next burb he would turn his attention to and asked listeners to send in their suggestions.

Mix 94.5 offices and studios are at 450 Roberts Road, Subiaco.

Number was up

The amount of money a Subiaco-based company was paid for consultancy work on a proposed cultural centre for Subiaco council was inadvertently inflated ten fold in a recent POST article.

NS Projects was reported to have received $26,700 from the council in relation to a request for quotation (RFQ) for the potential attraction near the site of Subiaco Oval.

The actual amount was $2673.

Space for boys to learn

Christ Church Grammar School officially opened its new preparatory school on February 6.

"We have created learning spaces where boys will grow intellectually, emotionally and socially with the facilitation and guidance of our wonderful team of teachers," principal Alan Jones said.

"With amazing teachers and over 5000sq.m of innovative learning spaces, we are well placed to motivate every boy to achieve his best."

Nude selfies on Rotto

The simple pleasures of life on Rottne Island include fishing, sun-bathing, and the glories of nature.

A POSTie fishing with mates at Henrietta Rocks last Thursday afternoon was startled to glimpse a naked man dash out of a nearby secluded cove.

The nudist must have seen the anglers, as he quickly retreated out of sight.

Intrigued, the POSTie scaled a rocky outcrop – and saw the man taking selfies as he lay in the buff on the sand.

Rottne has more than 80 beaches and bays.

Hairy hunter's favourite takeaway

A POST reader walking through Cottesloe's Grant-Marine Park was shocked to come across a large furry hunter.

"This bush is lovingly tended by Coastcare volunteers," our reader, Catherine, said.

"Ironically mounted on the sign saying 'coastal rehabilitation area – please keep off' was a large fluffy black-and-white domestic cat."

To her horror, the cat pounced on a small bird or a lizard, so she distracted it.

"It calmly strolled out of the bush and across my path, only to sit at the base of a coastal sheoak and eye off the willy wagtails in the branches," Catherine said.

"The wagtails started frantically tweeting as the cat crept up towards its prey."

Catherine said the tame cat seemed so comfortable she felt sure this was not its first hunt.

"The POST recently published a letter from Margaret Owen about the celebrated sighting of a precious wren species in this same bush," she said.

"It's very sad to think how vulnerable the birds and lizards are to unrestrained cats.

"What would the public response be if I allowed my dog to wander off-leash, terrorising the local nature?"
